Welcome to the IPS annual report 2014, which includes information about our editorial activities, including editorial developments, management information, marketing and sales information, and publication statistics.

INTRODUCTION

The main goals of the IPS editorial team in place since January 2012 have been to consolidate the identity of the journal and to enhance its global reach. IPS continues to respond to the diversification of scholarly concerns in contemporary international studies. It brings a wide range of traditions from historical, legal, economic, cultural and political sociology to bear on some of the key questions defining world politics today. Its primary intellectual signature is the creation of a stimulating and already influential meeting ground between contemporary work in sociology/socio-political theory and international studies. In doing so it encourages the development of theoretical, conceptual and methodological resources bringing fresh insights to major challenges in global politics.

The journal also responds to the globalization of international studies. It continues to be especially successful in engaging the distinctive theoretical traditions that have emerged in Europe and in strengthening the relation between intellectual communities in Europe and North America. It also continues to work explicitly on delivering on its ambition to encourage submissions from beyond these two regions. The journal has created the possibility of submitting articles in languages other than English, with reviews in the language of submission and translation into English after acceptance for publication. In 2014 we circulated a call for papers in 10 different languages among diverse academic communities, with the help of our team of Associate Editors as well as of our Communications Team. The journal also experimented with commissioning interviews to increase its global scope.

The journal has sustained the increased number of submissions of last year. IPS also continues to receive a significant number of manuscripts from areas of the world beyond North America and northwest Europe. The quality of such submissions is still uneven but the trend is a clear response to the initiatives to extend our reach. We expect this effort to gradually produce better quality as well as an increase in numbers of submissions from outside Europe and North America and a more balanced and diverse distribution of submissions within those regions.

The improvement of the administration of IPS' editorial process is one of the priorities of the current editorial team. We aim at the reduction of turn-over time, faster distribution of manuscripts to referees, improvement of our response time to authors, among other aspects of the production of the journal. Moving the management of the editorial process to the Scholar One system last year contributed significantly to the achievement of these goals.

THE WEBSITE

IPS' new website is up and running since the end of last year. The site will be used as resource to improve our communication with readers and the academic community worldwide. It gives the editors the ability to implement specific dissemination strategies, interact with readers and potential authors, highlight initiatives and events of interest for the journal and, more generally, enhance the visibility of IPS. The site will serve as a complementary source of information to Wiley's corporate site. The site is multilingual.

GLOBAL REACH

One of the main features of the journal has been the creation of a space open to academics from all regions of the world, to their languages, their approaches. One of the characteristics differentiating International Political Sociology from other academic journals has therefore been to welcome submissions in languages other than English. In 2013 as a new strategy to expand our reach we translated the Call for Papers to several languages and asked our associate editors to engage efforts to disseminate the Call in their countries and regions. The strategy has been partially successful. It has led to sustaining submissions from regions across the world. These submissions are mostly in English. The journal continues to receive only a very limited number of submissions in languages other than English and from other regions than the ones from which the journal draws the majority of its articles. We are aware that this is a long-term process and that we need to constantly renew our efforts to enhance our global reach and attract high quality manuscripts from regions outside of Europe and North America.

Forum 2013-2014

We are pleased to report that the IPS Forum continues to be successful through Vol. 7/8. The Forum allows for shorter, diverse interventions on new topics, issues, thinkers or theories, which serves our wider community of readers and promotes International Political Sociology as an excellent venue for the publication of new innovative interdisciplinary work. Each contribution is between 1-2000 words, with a maximum word count of 10,000 words.

After a widely-distributed call for proposals, seven proposals were received by the January 15th deadline, two of which were incomplete. These proposals were evaluated by Forum Associate Editor Mark Salter and the editors Jef Huysmans and João Pontes Nogueira, and ranked by relevance to the IPS community, novelty, global reach, and the degree to which it included new voices.

We want to encourage members of the Editorial Board and the Communications Team to promote the Forum, particularly from non-European and non-North American Editors.

INTERVIEW

We are currently reviewing the commissioning and publication of interviews in IPS. In the summer, we sent out a call for interviews but received only a limited number of proposals. None of them met sufficiently the mission criteria that we set for the interviews. Interviews are aimed at introducing scholars in or of the global south whose ideas have not been, for one reason or another, widely disseminated or read among scholars of International Political Sociology but whose contributions are of interest to them. We are currently evaluating if it would be possible to organize the interviews differently and/or to develop another instrument to realize the same objective.

CONTENT MANAGEMENT - WILEY-BLACKWELL 2013

Citation Ranking and Impact Factor

This is the fourth year IPS has been included in ISI journal citation report. IPS has an excellent impact factor of 1.5. It is ranked in the top quartile of each of the three subject categories it is ranked in – IR, Political Science, and Sociology.

Journals Citation Ranking (JCR) metrics

Metric	2013
2 year-Impact Factor	1.5
Ranking in International Relations	11 out of 82
Ranking in Political Science	25 out of 156
Ranking in Sociology	19 out of 137

Immediacy Index	0.143
-----------------	-------

The 2-year impact factor is the metric primarily used to distinguish each journal within a particular category. We have included the breakdown for citations and source items specific to the 2-year impact factor.

The ranking in International Relations – 11 out of 82 – is impressive for a young journal like IPS. The ranking in both political science and sociology is also excellent. IPS is ranked among the oldest and most heavily cited journals in the respective fields.

2013 2-Year Impact Factor

Cites in 2013 to items published in: 2012 = 32	Number of items published in: 2012 = 29
2011 = 43	2011 = 21
Sum: 75	Sum: 50
Calculation: Cites to recent items	$\frac{75}{50} = 1.500$
Number of recent items	50

In 2013, International Political Sociology received 75 citations to articles published in 2011 and 2012. The journal also had 40 citable items that count towards the denominator of the Impact Factor calculation (note that this excludes Forum articles).

The ISA journal homepages (ISQ shown above) on Wiley Online Library were maintained year-long. These included links to free content, announcements, the creation of virtual issues, and reader info as appropriate, as well as cross-linking among the bundle and promoting ISA's own social media outlets. Special efforts included a 10-language Call for Papers on the IPS homepage. Featured virtual Issues included the ISA cross-title virtual issue "Foreign Policy in the US Election," created with Cooper Drury, with articles from all five ISA journals.

Politics and the Media* <http://bit.ly/politicsandmedia>

To promote research in Political Science, Policy and International Studies, Wiley created a portfolio campaign and included the journal on the theme of 'Politics and the Media'. This campaign was launched in tandem with the pre-conference email on the American Political Science Association (attached). The following article was included in the campaign:

A Global Politics of Pity? Disaster Imagery and the Emotional Construction of Solidarity after the 2004 Asian Tsunami

Impact Factor Promotion <http://bit.ly/wpoliticscited>

Following the release of the impact factors for journals in July this year, we created a new feature page to include our ISI listed titles in Political Science and International Studies. This was to highlight the new Impact Factor, and one of the articles that contributed to the new ranking for the journal. This was promoted in our latest newsletter (attached) and included the following article:

The Minor Politics of Rightful Presence: Justice and Relationality in City of Sanctuary

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to take advantage of this annual report to thank the reviewers who continue to offer their time and their expertise to the journal. Without the valuable work offered by our colleagues, both within and outside of the journal board, we would struggle to maintain the high standards of papers published by the journal.

We would also like to thank once again all those who have helped us translate the Call for papers into ten languages, as well as disseminate it through their networks.

We would like to thank the members of the Editorial Board and Communication Teams for their constant work in suggesting reviewers to the editors, allowing to open-up new perspectives and possibilities.
