

Our workshop, entitled "The Repertoire of Tactics in Conflict," held on March 31, 2012 prior to the ISA annual meeting in San Diego, CA, was a success. We had 15 participants—Victor Asal, Kanisha Bond, Erica Chenoweth, David Cunningham, Kathleen Cunningham, Christian Davenport, Page Fortna, Scott Gates, Kristian Gleditsch, Adriana Lins de Albuquerque, Will Moore, Ragnhild Nordas, Jakana Thomas, Reed Wood, and Julian Wucherpfennig. In addition, we had one graduate student observer attend. Twelve papers were presented, and each presenter received detailed comments from a discussant as well as from the overall group that had all read the papers in advance of the workshop. The discussion was constructive, and the papers will be much improved from the comments received.

The workshop will contribute to several outputs going forward. Kathleen Cunningham (one of the organizers of the workshop), along with Erica Chenoweth (one of the participants) are co-editing a special issue of Journal of Peace Research on non-violence. A number of the papers presented at the conference—including those by Will Moore, Christian Davenport, Adriana Lins de Albuquerque and Victor Asal—will be included in that special issue, and those papers are currently under review. The participants had a couple of weeks after the workshop to revise those papers based on their participation and that process should help both with the prospects for publication as well as with the quality of articles published.

We are also currently planning panels to submit for next year's ISA meeting in San Francisco. As we understand it, each workshop only receives one guaranteed panel at the conference, but the workshop was strong enough and included enough papers that we plan to submit another panel through the regular section submissions. Each of these panels should allow for dissemination of this research to a broader audience and for continued coordination among this diverse research community.

In conclusion, then, the ISA workshop was a success. The organizers have received a number of statements from the participants indicating that they feel that the workshop was useful and productive.
