A MESSAGE FROM PREMIER DOUG FORD

I'm delighted to extend greetings to everyone attending the 60th Annual Convention of the International Studies Association (ISA).

It's great to see such an interdisciplinary group of academics, practitioners, policy experts, private-sector workers, independent researchers and other professionals gathering here in Toronto to discuss issues related to international, transnational and global affairs. This is an opportunity to network, share knowledge and collaborate on a complex array of political, economic, cultural and other issues that play an important role in shaping the world we live in.

I thank the ISA for hosting this conference and for its commitment to bringing together scholars, practitioners and students to address some of the most pressing issues of our time.

To all those who made the journey to Toronto, I hope you enjoy your stay in our province's capital, and have the chance to take in some of the city's terrific attractions.

I also hope you have a productive and successful convention.
